Our laboratory examines the ecology, behavior and physiology of various animals living in their natural environment ranging from the ocean to the land. Analyzing the interactions between organisms in the same or different ecosystems helps us understand how biodiversity has been maintained and must be conserved.